PREFACE

Names of places, like names of persons, are given primarily for convenience and accuracy in reference and identification. As the works of man spread more widely over the land, the need for greater standardization and wider common understanding of place names becomes more important. The Indiana Board on Geographic Names, an informal organization established by joint action of the several cooperating organizations represented on the board, serves as an advisory body to State and Federal agencies and others who desire guidance in decisions involving controversial geographic names.

State organizations that make extensive use of maps have for some time been aware of numerous problems involving geographic names. Most directly concerned, perhaps, is the Indiana Flood Control and Water Resources Commission, which, by the nature of its broadly defined duties, works with even the smallest streams and watersheds in every corner of the State. Small geographic features generally have no accepted name; at best they are uncertainly or casually named. Because of this interest in geographic names, the Indiana Flood Control and Water Resources Commission has for some time served, informally, as geographic names consultant to the United States Geological Survey in the latter's program of topographic mapping in Indiana.

On February 20, 1961, Joseph I. Perrey, Chief Engineer, Indiana Flood Control and Water Resources Commission, sent a letter to several other organizations known to be interested in mapping and geographic names, inviting them to appoint a representative to help organize a board to deal with geographic names in Indiana. The organizational meeting was held in Indianapolis on April 7, 1961. Representatives of the several cooperating organizations were Denzil Doggett, Division of Water Resources, Indiana Department of Conservation; Caroline Dunn, Indiana Historical Society; Henry H. Gray, Geological Survey, Indiana Department of Conservation; Robert D. Miles, School of Civil Engineering, Purdue University; Joseph I. Perrey, Indiana Flood Control and Water Resources Commission; H. P. Ulrich, School of Agriculture, Purdue University; M. O. Wise, Indiana State Highway Commission. Joseph I. Perrey was elected chairman. The name, Indiana Board on Geographic Names, was chosen, and a guide for operation of the board was adopted on May 19, 1961. At regular meetings held, generally monthly, from this date through June 30, 1962, the board has acted upon 125 cases.

In this pamphlet and others to be issued periodically the decisions of the board, called "findings," are collected and issued for public information. These findings are reached after investigation of historical references and current usage, both written and spoken. This information is tempered with good cartographic practice, and an attempt is made to avoid unnecessary duplication and confusion. It is hoped that the findings of the board will be accepted as authoritative and will be helpful in settling local controversies regarding geographic names.

Anyone who wishes may apply to the board, directly or through any of the cooperating organizations, requesting a finding for establishing new geographic names or for determining proper usage of existing names in Indiana. As much pertinent information as possible, both current and historic, should be furnished with the request. The address of the board is: Indiana Board on Geographic Names, Room 606, State Office Building, Indianapolis 4, Indiana.

INTRODUCTION

The following register of Indiana place names contains 125 entries which were investigated and approved as findings by the Indiana Board on Geographic Names during the period May 19, 1961, through June 30, 1962. These names were submitted for investigation by various individuals, private organizations, and local, State, and Federal agencies. The approved names include names newly applied to previously unnamed features, new names replacing existing but unsatisfactory names, and names selected from among several conflicting names.

The approved names, which are underscored herein, define the proper form, spelling, and application of the names of the subject features. The findings in the principal body of this publication reflect the influence of historical background, cartographic usage and trends, local preference as far as can be ascertained, and legal decisions where applicable.

Each geographic feature is described as to actual or relative size or extent, by reference to civil subdivisions, and by congressional land survey boundaries. Geographic coordinates in latitude and longitude are given at the limits of linear features, such as streams, ditches, ridges, and roads; at the center of cemeteries, lakes, islands, and populated regions; and at points of geographic importance, such as the crest of a hill or the depression of a valley.

The Indiana Board on Geographic Names recommends use of the approved names listed in this publication. The board does not recommend the use of the variant names, spellings, or applications, which are recorded following the detailed description of the feature and the word "Not."

An index, which includes the approved names and the known variant names, forms the concluding section of this issue. The combined listing is presented in alphabetical order. Names which are not approved are followed by the word "See" and reference is given to the approved name which is underscored in the list. Where there is more than one finding which has been approved under the same name, that name will be followed by a parenthetical number which indicates the number of such findings and their corresponding location by page number. Where a variant name applies to two or more approved names, the variant entry follows the words "See also."
